WOMAN'S FOOL PLAN SUCCEEDS WHERE DOCTORS FAIL

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 31.—A woman's "fool notion" worked to relieve her husband of intense pain, after doctors and neighbors had exhausted themselves trying to force a bug to crawl out of his ear.

Frank Ramey, of Hillsboro, Ill., drove his wife to the home of her parents near Donnellson for a visit.

While he was tinkering with the automobile a bug crawled in his ear. He tried to pick it out, but only drove it into the inner ear. All of the staple family remedies were tried without avail.

Two physicians were likewise unsuccessful, when it suddenly occurred to the suffering man's wife that all bugs seemed to be attracted by light, and she suggested that a light be held to his ear to see if it would coax the bug out.

The doctors smiled indulgently, but allowed her to hold an electric flashlight against her husband's ear, and out came the bug.

IGNORED BY FATHER IN WILL, STEALS IT

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 31.—Walter Cullen, aged fifty, is lodged in the county jail here, charged with the theft of the will of his father, Peter Cullen, a retired railroad man.

Walter is alleged to have visited Surrogate Coddings office and sought a copy of the will, on the ground that it was recorded in the signatures. He was given the original and immediately decamped.

Walter was apprehended while returning from work. He had the will in his pocket according to the detectives who arrested him.

"I thought it was the same as a deed," was Walter's excuse, "and after it was recorded, it belonged to anybody of the family."

The Cullen will disposes of property estimated to be worth $30,000. It gives it all to other brothers and sisters of Walter, and ignores the latter entirely.
